CHRISTINA DONG

- Journalism & PR student
- Extreme music consumer

I need to find new music. I get really bored hearing the same thing over and over again—it's like 'not this again'

I have FOMO if I don't follow my favorite artists [on social media], but I don't really do anything with that

BROOKE TOMLINSON

- Professional singer/songwriter trying to make it in Los Angeles

They don't really sign you unless you have a major internet following already

As an artist, I wish I didn't have to think about "oh my Instagram," because that feels very superficial. But that's like really important now, unlike 5 years ago

↑ for those who wouldn't have the means to their current position

POV

Producer

- Not famous
- major labels only take artists who already have a following
- it's as much about the image as the music
 - draws time, energy → superficial
 - limbo of having your song on hold
- Barriers to entry (capital ($))
 - network
 - personal brand
 - popular music platforms (play mainly well-known artists)
 - ↑ competition

quality of music | uncontrollable factors

Consumers want new music, but by def'n these new artists won't have the same "developed" veneer as a pop star. Won't give the same artist "exposure"

Q: Why are pop stars popular then?

music-making music-ability vs. success

Musical Integrity v. Professional needs

Revised Point of View: Consumer

Consumers need an easy way to find quality music from new artists that matches their taste, in a way that feels like an adventure instead of a chore.

Revised Point of View: Artists

Independent artists need an alternative career path to the time spent networking, cultivating their image, and raising capital, so they can focus on creating quality music.

Experience Prototype: Template app-building for musicians

Assumptions:

- Artists need and might pay for a service to streamline their digital publicity
- Fans want to engage with artists through such a digital app or interface

Experience Prototype: Template app-building for musicians

Things that worked:

- Simple interface, easy to use
- Accessible to non-technical people

Things that didn't work:

- Still unclear whether artists would be receptive

Surprises:

- Suggestion that users could recommend new features or customization

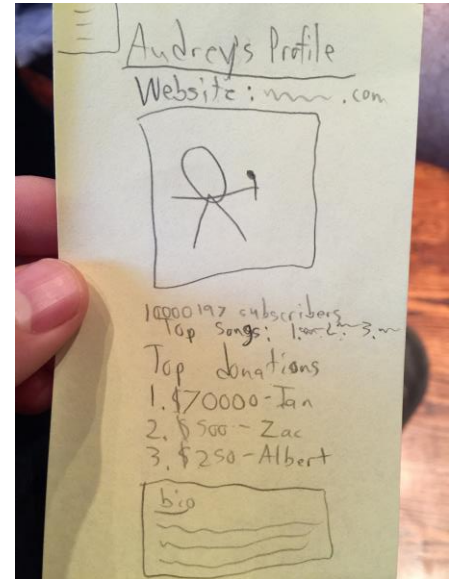

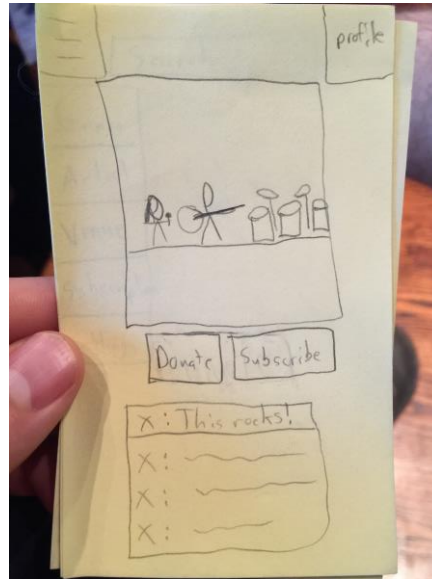

New Learnings:

- Could be useful for agents as well in scouting new artists. Need to asses this

Experience Prototype: Twitch for Musicians

Assumptions:

- Fans have a need for an authentic, two-way relationship with artists
- A model of unprecedented success in the gaming world could translate to an even broader audience in the music world

Experience Prototype: Twitch for Musicians

Things that worked:

- Ability to add comments, communicate directly with the artist in realtime
- Ability to participate in experiences that would otherwise be missed

Things that didn't work:

- Need more options for searching

Surprises:

- “Donate” vs. “Support”

New Learnings:

- Fans have a need for an authentic, two-way relationship with artists
- Live concerts + Oculus Rift

Experience Prototype: Music with Friends

Assumptions:

- Music sharing is a social activity
- Gamification could be a successful incentive

Experience Prototype: Music with Friends

Things that worked:

- Social aspect was fun
- Participants shared a variety of songs

Things that didn't work:

- Unclear how compelling it would be without the face-to-face interaction
- Points system was hard to keep track of

Surprises:

- Some participants struggled to find obscure/novel music to share

New Learnings:

- Gamification is promising but needs to be further developed
