Focus on Food

An aerial photograph of a farm during the growing season. The landscape is dominated by vibrant green soybean fields and golden-yellow cornfields. The corn is planted in long, wavy, undulating rows that create a rhythmic, flowing pattern across the terrain. In the upper right corner, a farmstead is visible, featuring a large white barn, a tall red and white silo, and a smaller white house. The background shows more agricultural fields under a clear sky, with a road and some trees visible in the distance.

Initial POV From Last Week

Met Guillaume Bienaime

Realized how new restaurants waste food because they do not know how much to order

Would be game-changing to stop new restaurants from wasting so much food

David Kay

Stanford Senior

President of People for Animal Welfare

Author of petition for a sustainability-themed dining hall

Advocate of Meatless Mondays campaign

We were shocked to realize how much of an effect eating meat and consuming animal products has on the environment

It would be game-changing to make others aware of the effects that eating meat and consuming animal products has on the environment

Bryan Cheong

Stanford Sophomore

Originally from Singapore

Math & Computational Science Major

We were surprised to learn that Bryan believed that only through government initiative could we make impactful changes for sustainability

It would be game-changing if we could inspire people like Bryan Cheong and others to make a change through their concerted efforts without help from the government

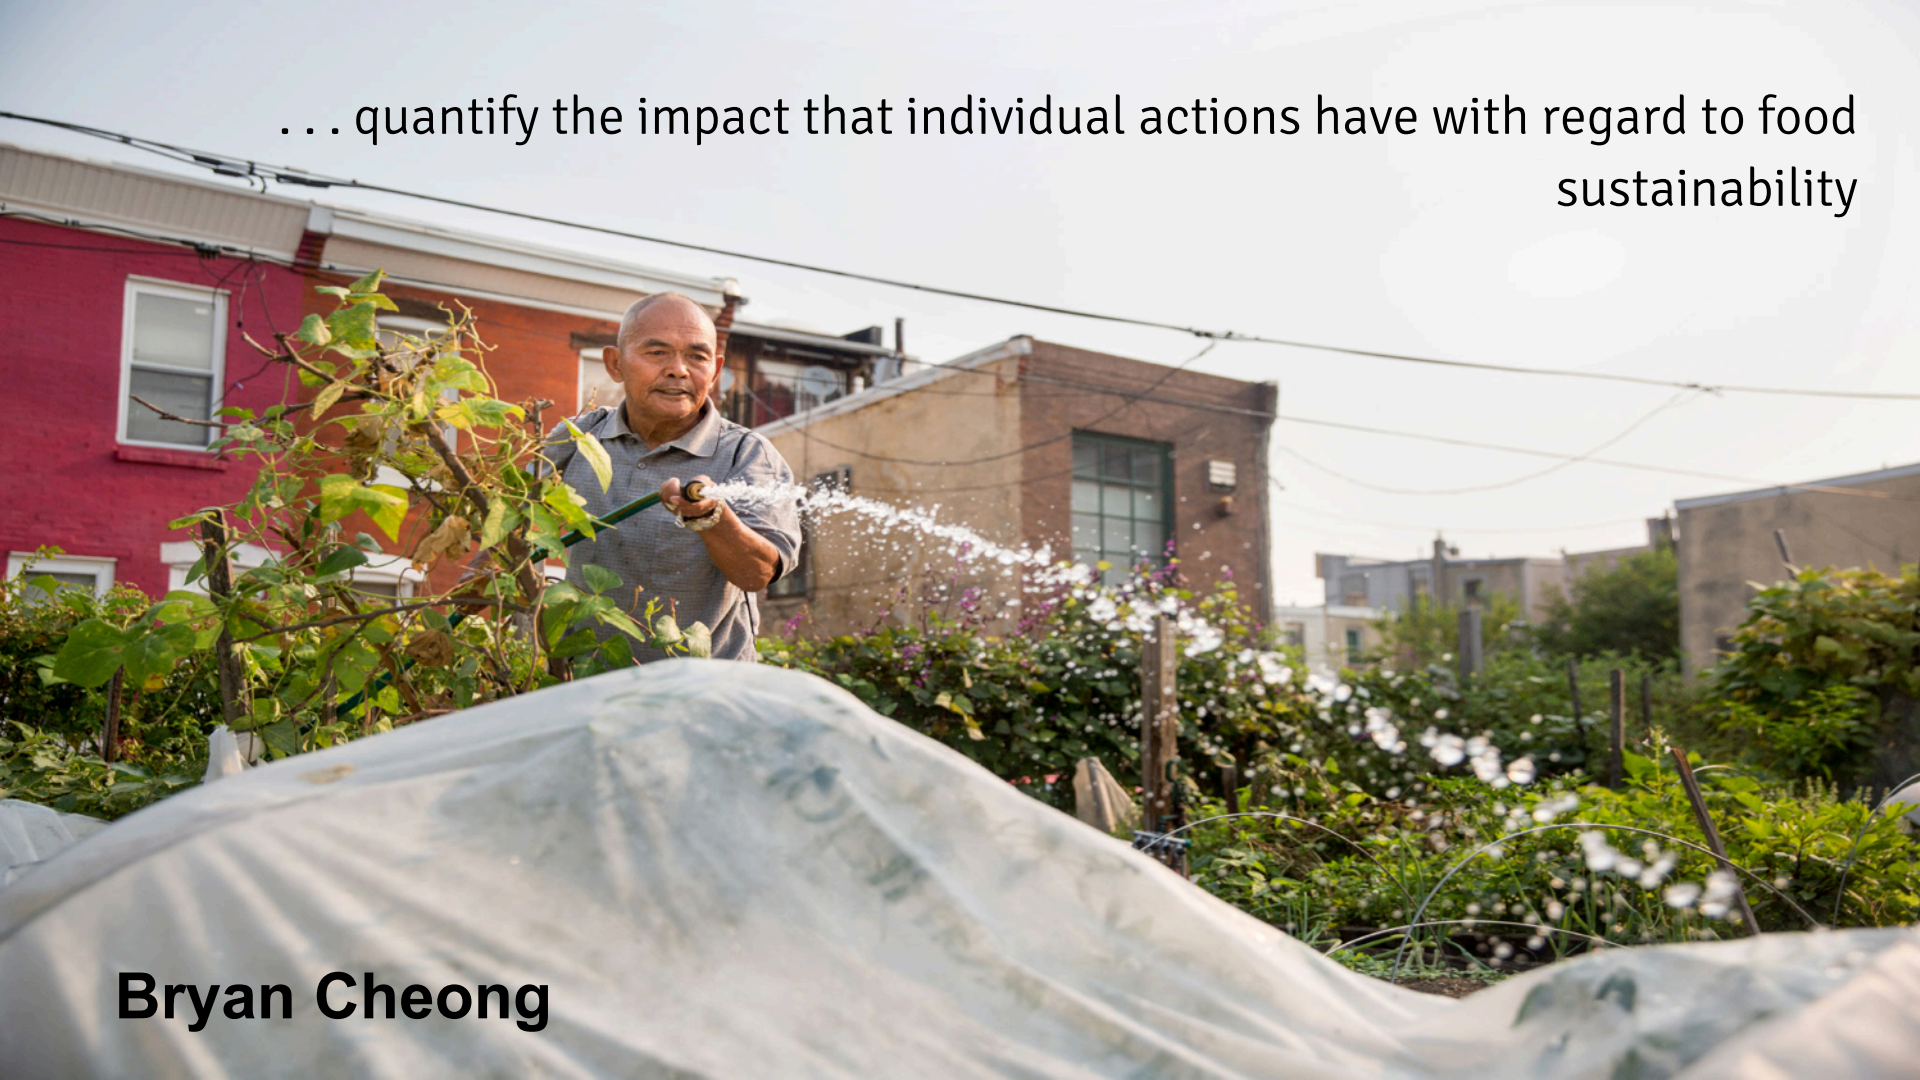

How Might We ...

... create opportunities to make sustainable consumption a social effort

David Kay

... quantify the impact that individual actions have with regard to food sustainability

Bryan Cheong

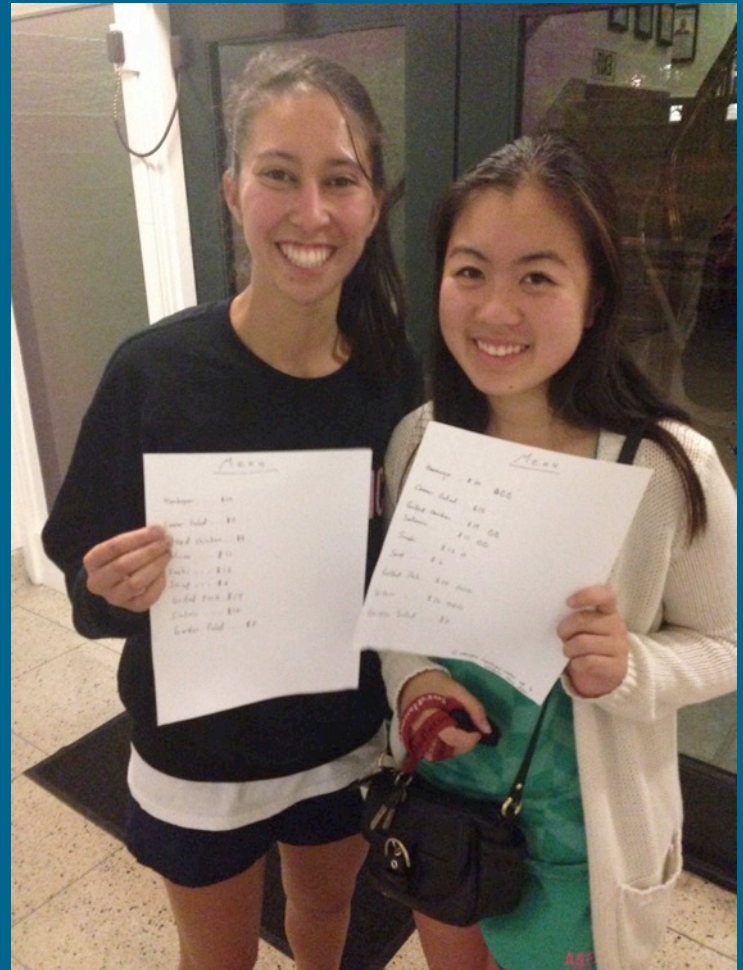

... get other people involved in helping new restaurants waste less food
